

Invitation to an Online Course:
"Democracy during the days of Corona"
With Dr. Uki Maroshek-Klarman

The coronavirus pandemic has upended our lives in untold ways. Things we took for granted like intimate dinner parties, carefree travel, handshakes and hugging our parents & grandparents are no longer permitted. Social distancing and uncertainty are the new normal. We've lost freedom and livelihoods to a virus that's invisible to the naked human eye.

The coronavirus has also rocked the boat in an arena we may be less inclined to contemplate: democracy. There, too, Corona has upset axioms we hold dear.

In the name of health and survival, we've acquiesced to quarantines, curfews, and expanded state surveillance of citizens. We've relinquished personal liberties that we never imagined we'd be asked, or willing, to do. Important questions arise. As the executive power expands, what freedoms and rights have we surrendered during this pandemic? What are the lingering threats to democracy, such as the risk for political abuse? What are we to make of these intrusions into the public domain? Questions as to who gets to make decisions in a time of crisis will be relevant in our lives long after this pandemic subsides.

This urgent topic will be explored and taught in an intensive international course called "Democracy during the days of Corona". This program for group facilitation is rooted in an empirical approach to civic education and interpersonal communication and conflict resolution using the award-winning The Betzavta Method – Transforming Conflicts into Dilemma.

Moderating via ZOOM allows participants from across the globe to learn together and from each other. This cross-section deepens and broadens our understanding of the challenges to democracy in various countries. The course has been adapted to facilitate the vibrancy, excitement and emotional verve in the virtual classroom. Participants will be awarded a certificate upon completion of the program.
